The building known as the Co-op Education Centre has a long and interesting history. It is situated in Fore Street, one of the oldest roads in Ipswich.

Early records show the building was called 'Chestnut House', with parts of the building dating back to the 18th Century. In its early life the building played a role in the medical care of the poor in Ipswich. Later it was used to house American servicemen during WWII.

The building is a 5 minute walk from Ipswich's attractive harbour, which is surrounded by restaurants, coffee shops and retail outlets. The town centre is also only a 5 minutes walk away, making it easy for students to walk to a wide range of attractions.
